1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a system and method for conveying material between a source and a destination. More specifically, the present invention relates to an automated conveying system and method that provides for the conveying of material from a source to a destination through a plurality of tracks each having multiple sections.
2. Description of the Prior Art The manual handling of material within a manufacturing facility presents unique problems to the facility that are generally unattenuated in a facility with other automated material handling equipment. The manual handling of material within a manufacturing facility is a concern in view of the high-cost of material and labor. Material is typically conveyed within the facility using a variety of techniques. The most common conveyance technique in the automated material handling industry is a track system. The main components of a typical track system include a movable cart, a track, a supply source, and a destination. The track is typically comprised of a plurality of sections that are hingedly attached to one another. The movable cart is connected to the track sections at their hinged interface. Each track section includes an end section that includes an end section that provides for the attachment of the track section to the cart. The track system is typically maintained in a vertical orientation. The track system is often operated within a specific confines such as a flight, an aisle, and a central aisle or,
