Print2Desktop is a tool that enables users to print files from a remote computer to a local printer. The program can be easily installed on an ordinary computer, either as an application or as a service that can be executed as a file or as a remote printer. The program uses the Microsoft Remote Desktop Protocol (RDP) to access a remote printer through the LAN, thus making it possible for users to remotely print from Windows or Linux servers to consumer printers. Once the software is installed, it is possible to specify a remote printer that can be accessed by users of that computer. By default, the program enables printing to the default printer, but an expert can also specify alternate printers. You can even set up passwords for these printers. Users of the program can be assigned limited access permissions, with the options available allowing you to specify whether they can print files from certain sites. You can also enable off-line printing, which can be useful in case of unexpected reboots. The program supports Windows and Linux distributions. Print2Desktop License: You may get this software for free.
