Energy Secretary Rick Perry says California is "on the verge of collapse." That's a big statement, given that California already has 8 million electric customers and New York City has about 16 million. So why are California and New York "going to the poorhouse"? Perry says that if California and New York "have bad policies, their customers will begin to flee, they will not have credit, and they will not be able to afford the basic necessities of life in the state. So then what happens to the people of those states?" No one doubts that California and New York have bad policies. Perry seems to be saying that they're going to keep offering the same flawed policies, and the result will be a catastrophic financial collapse. Let's set aside the question of whether the Trump administration is an exceptionally poor regulator of electric companies -- it certainly is. What the Trump administration has done is impose the most draconian set of federal regulations on electric companies anywhere in the history of our republic. Under the Trump administration's regulations, electric companies are required to sign contracts with customers that don't allow customers to switch providers -- even if doing so would mean they are paying more than 10 percent above the regulated price for electricity. Perry says that if California and New York have bad policies, "then what happens to the people of those states?" They can move elsewhere. Perry does not see that as a sign of a problem, so let's not bother to explain how much of a problem that is. Another section of the administration's regulations would make it illegal for states to set their own regulations that are more stringent than the federal rules. If that sounds like something new and intrusive, it is. At least 15 states and the District of Columbia have passed laws protecting customers from predatory pricing by state-regulated electric companies. (If you don't know what that is, please check out "Big Electric Rate Hikes Hurt California Consumers") Even California Republican Sen. Diane Feinstein said that if the Trump administration gets its way, "people in states like mine are going to lose their electricity." Here's the rub. As we've pointed out before, the nonpartisan California Public Utility Commission has said it believes that California has the legal authority to keep imposing its own regulations on the industry even if the Trump administration claims it can ignore its own regulations. That's a big

It is more than likely that you will encounter two key players in the identity management space: IdenTrust and Shibboleth. They both have their own respective markets and technologies, in addition to their own beta releases of their products. IdenTrust has been a late mover in the identity management space with many of the technologies used in LinkOut from the architects of non-traditional identity management: Facebook Connect, Google OAuth, OpenID, etc. Leveraging these to create its proprietary system of managing access to websites, this is a company that often describes itself as having 'identity services'. Shibboleth is a leading open source identity management solution, primarily geared towards academic institutions. Its primary philosophy is that user identity should never be considered to be synonymous with computer identity (uid). Instead, the user is the ID. With Shibboleth, you build your own identity by registering your computer, not your identity. Which one is the better 3da54e8ca3
