The city of Viola lies in ruins. It was invaded by demons known as the Syld. The Syld plundered the land of Viola, leaving nothing but shattered black glass towers and a crumbled city. The remaining people had no choice but to hide and wait out the invasion. They built their homes in underground cities known as Tunnels, where they remained safe from the vengeful monsters. The city was abandoned. The city was demolished. The city wasn't what it used to be. One such Syld named Zesta entered the depths of the city at one fateful day in the past. Upon entering a tunnel, his silhouette is followed by a white orb of light. Zesta watches as the orb moves around, seeming to take on a life of its own. The orb flashes with the brilliance of light. It spins in a circle, a blur of light. When it gets close enough, Zesta lunges and grabs the light in his hand. The orb becomes like a great serpent that writhes as it was being held. It strikes Zesta with great power and launches him high into the air. The orb grows in size and becomes enormous. Zesta is caught in the light with no recourse. The syld dies and his soul, his life force, is sealed inside the orb. Zesta's soul is sealed inside an orb. The city is a labyrinth. It's a mystery. What was once a great place of civilization is now being overtaken by darkness. The people of Viola are in hiding. Keeping their homes in the tunnels. Some of the people have spent much of their lives here, lost to the void of the dark towers. They talk a little bit of Viola's past, of their former heroes. There's a force that rises up around the people. It's a group of young people that have grown up in the tunnels. They are bound by the promise of the Syld, and that of an impending end. Their leader is a pretty, mature-looking girl named Viola. Viola: The Heroine's Melody is a platformer that throws you into a tale of rebirth. You play as Viola, a young girl hiding in the dark. You'll explore a place of destruction. You'll fight monsters, collect power, and play mini-games. The game's story is very simple. It's a tale of a young Viol

Are you 100% sure though?' 'Yes, I'm sure. I was with him when he answered the call. It was when he told me to keep my eyes open.' 'Why didn't he walk away?' 'Because he wanted to be sure he'd left it on, he said.' 'So you rang him.' 'I couldn't do anything but I rang him. I tried to tell him to turn it off, but there was a lot of noise when he answered the call. I couldn't hear what I was saying.' 'What was happening on the other end?' 'His mum was crying, shouting something. She seemed upset. The rest I couldn't really hear because it was so loud.' 'Did you hear anything that made you think anyone in the shop was going to get hurt?' 'I couldn't hear anything after he answered the call. I could hear her screaming when he spoke to her. That was all. After she said something I heard a sort of grunt. I got the impression she'd been hurt but I couldn't really make anything out. It was all quite muffled.' 'Did you turn it off?' 'Yes, I told him to turn it off. I was still on the phone, but I could see she'd stopped shouting. I thought maybe he'd finished speaking. I didn't see any movement in the shop. I still couldn't really hear what was happening, I didn't want to hang up, I thought it might have been more violent. I thought I might have been right to hang up. When the receptionist was on the phone she said there was another customer who wanted to speak to Paul. I spoke to the receptionist and I c9d1549cdd

Q: Writing a JUnit test for chained calls with Hibernate Validator I have a lot of code with @Valid and @NotNull annotations that at some point is going to be called. To test this I thought it would be good to write some tests. I first tried to introduce a @RunWith(SpringJUnit4ClassRunner.class) and this works fine, but it seems like I'm jumping all over the place if I just introduce the test runner. So now I am doing it this way:

@RunWith(SpringJUnit4ClassRunner.class) public class UnitTest {
@Mock private myService service; @Mock private myValidator validator; @Autowired private Validator validator; @Autowired private myClass target; @Test public void testAnnotation(){ myClass.doSomething(param);
assertThat(myValidator.checkAnnotation(target).validate()); } } myValidator is just the Hibernate Validator 4. What I like is that I can now quite easily @Test the doSomething method, but then I am stuck to @Mock these related classes. So my question is basically how to write such a test. I did read the hibernate-validator-spring-junit-master and thought it was not really clarifying this, because in general I want to test all the dependencies to finish. Anyway: Any way I could @Test the call to myValidator.checkAnnotation(target).validate()? A: In the TestClass it's OK to have the service, validator and target as constructor arguments. Of course you do test the real functionality of the
