Among them, the most frequently reported index is the IU antioxidant value (IUAV). The IUAV is a compound index that shows the total antioxidant capacity of food by the molar ratio of a reference standard. However, a new antioxidant capacity index, the VA, was recently proposed. The VA was developed for evaluating the antioxidant activity of plant extracts and can be used to analyze the antioxidant capacity of foods. This index is quite different from the IUAV, and the difference between the VA and the IUAV is not as large as the one between the IUAV and ascorbic acid. In the antioxidant food activity spectrum index (AFSI), which compares the antioxidant capacity of plant foods, a reference standard showing the antioxidant capacity of foods is not used. The AFSI is calculated based on the total antioxidant activity of food rather than the antioxidant activity of a single component. The AFSI has been found to be useful for analyzing the antioxidant activity of plant foods, and allows the quality of foods to be evaluated from the viewpoint of health maintenance.Q: Show the integral from 0 to 1 is equal to $\frac{x^2}{4}$ Use the formula $A=\int_a^b f(x) \, dx=F(b)-F(a)$ to show that $$\int_0^1 \sqrt{\cos(x^2)} \, dx =\frac{1}{4}$$ Would I just use the formula $F(b)-F

Murders in Space is a serial killer character and franchise created by Karl Williams. His first appearance was in the black and white comic book series Witchblade, which was set to the film's visual look. However, Williams changed the character's look (from her black and white version) before the first issue of the comic book, along with minor changes such as the revelation that the character was a witch and not a vampire (its previous title and origin). The actual character of Murdock was introduced during the story "Eye of the Night" in the Witchblade'''s miniseries identity change event, The Trial of Godserf's Blood, which appears in volume 1 of the Justice Society of America comic books. Murdock, as originally depicted by Karl Williams, appears in the DC Comics continuity as the comic book series Witchblade. Williams did not script the first two-issue limited series, and therefore his name does not appear in credit above the text of each issue. Williams wrote and drew the subsequent 7-issue limited series, and the original comic book characters did not return from these. Williams finally created his own character, Murdock, and brought her back in the 2010 series, however he is working under the Witchblade copyright. Overview Murdock's worship of the demon Turiel, who appears in the form of a black cat, forms the basis for her character and beliefs. Events The Murdock family survives a number of attacks from a new superhuman killer dubbed the "Black Vampire" which kills entire families and attains nearly perfect knowledge of police and underworld activity. Out of desperation and due to her being the only potential witness, Ruth, the eldest Murdock sister stabs herself in the eye and transfers Turiel into her body. Shortly thereafter, a new clan of The Black Vampire assaults Murdock's home and kills Murdock's pregnant wife Sarah in front of Murdock. A cat-like creature called Surtur appears and kills the clan's mother and is preparing to kill Ruth. Murdock, who is not harmed, stabs Surtur with a dagger he has received from demon lord Mephisto. In gratitude for Ruth transferring her soul into Murdock's body, the demon Barbatos grants him the ability to kill. After months under threat of nightly murders until a trial, Murdock is acquitted thanks to information supplied by Sarah, telling a dead woman's story of a vampire killing years earlier.
