'THERE'S NO COST TO EUROPE, ONLY AN INVESTMENT' Driven by the ideology of solidarity, cooperation and the European idea of peace, the EU's GDP has nearly quadrupled since 1955. And when added to GDP per capita and the standard of living in each member state, Europe is the most economically powerful and prosperous political entity ever to have been forged out of a union of former enemies. The EU was founded on the peaceful transformation of a dozen nation states into one cohesive political community. In a world where sovereignty is an ever-elusive and fading concept, this achievement, much of it built over the last five decades, has been invaluable. And it has created a flourishing economic zone, the best environment in which ever for European industrialisation. EU Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker said in 2010 that "the European Union today is a major power in the international economy with huge purchasing power." And in all probability we will see more big-bang measures in the coming years. Last year, Germany became the second-largest national economy in the EU, pushing the UK out of the top five - a terrible omen for British policy-makers. And yet in 2013, the UK was the third-largest net contributor to the EU budget, according to a report in the European Voice, a leading business daily. While the EU was meant to be a 21st-century economic and political bloc, no-one ever dreamed of it as a military force - least of all at the price of its cohesion. But the reality is that the EU today is a full-fledged military alliance. British military budgets and troop numbers have been slashed to the bone by successive governments. But that doesn't change the fact that the UK is the second-largest EU defence spender after Germany, and that EU defence spending is expected to soar. So to
