been applied to the study of dynamic mechanics of ventilated lungs in real time, which is essential for the determination of mechanistic hypotheses. More recent microfluidic lung organ-on-a-chip models have demonstrated their promise for studying local mechanics of individual alveoli with fewer assumptions than standard large-scale mechanical models, but to date the current microfluidic models have not been used to study dynamic changes in alveolar mechanics in real time. We propose a novel microfluidic device which will be designed to: (1) enable all physiological contributors to lung mechanics to be studied, (2) provide near full normal alveolar mechanics to mimic realtime events, and (3) allow for lung tissue to be exposed to normal or hyperoxic conditions. We will further integrate the device with a unique oxygen concentration sensor and evaluate the ability to monitor alveolar oxygenation. If successful, the proposed device will provide a flexible in vitro platform which can be used to study dynamic alveolar mechanics in real-time, to determine critical mechanical perturbations in the lung, and to study the effects of lung injury on alveolar mechanics and ventilation. This proposal is significant because it is (1) a first step towards developing a new technique for studying real time dynamics of alveolar mechanics and alveolar oxygenation, (2) a method for correlating mechanical to biochemical events in the lung, and (3) a novel approach to study the effects of lung injury on alveolar mechanics and ventilation. district court that the proof demanded by RICO is simply not present in the case. 10 All three Bank One banks also contend that the district court erred in granting the Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. They contend that plaintiff should have been allowed to file an amended complaint to
