The most basic Photoshop tutorials cover basic techniques that you can use with any type of image in any tool. Whether you're starting out with Photoshop or you're an experienced user, you'll benefit from learning how to use Photoshop's tools correctly to achieve the intended results. 1. Importing an Image 1.1 Object Types When you import an image into Photoshop, you can access it by using the different object types. Each image type lets you access more or less of the available tools. 1.1.1 Image You can use the tool Image to navigate, edit, or convert the image. 1.1.2 Graphics When working in a browser, graphics are accessed using the tool Graphics. This option is available when you click the Image button in the browser to export the image from the browser. Graphics lets you create a new image, or you can crop, resize, rotate, or color adjust the image in a fast way. 1.1.3 Font If you're using a text editor, such as Microsoft Word, you can use the Font option to create text in the image. 1.1.4 Object You can convert one image into another using the Object tool. The Object tool can be used to create or manipulate images. You can also overlay images. You can convert graphics into other objects and create shapes. There are also over 50 different object types that you can create, including business card, brick, cube, balloon, calendar, ceiling, cylinder, cube, disk, digital photo, grid, icon, jigsaw puzzle, luggage, map, mirror, pill, puzzle piece, rectangle, sphere, star, teardrop, and wine glass, to name a few. 1.1.5 Smart Object You can use the Smart Objects to enhance your digital images. A Smart Object is any image that is flagged as a template, symbol, 3D model, or guide path. You can flag images as Smart Objects to convert them into a smart object, and they can be set to update automatically in sync with other formats of smart objects. 1.1.6 Shape You can use the Shape tool to draw freehand shapes in the canvas. A shape is a tool that lets you draw your own shapes. Some shapes come with preset characteristics, and other shapes create compound shapes out of sub-shapes. You can also use the Shape tool to apply preset effects

Q: Launch a script and check if it returns any value or fail the script I need to launch a Script Test with a reference to a shell script I created. If the script returns any value I want a event to be triggered as well as an variable updated to 1. If the script does not return any value I want the script to fail. I am unable to figure out how to do this. Any ideas would be appreciated. A: I guess that what you are looking for is a bash script that returns something if a command succeeds. Here I assume that you are using a terminal that supports linux-like terminals (that is, anacsh on the Windows platform). The following bash script should work: #!/bin/bash curl... | sh -s - if [[$?!= 0]] ; then echo "error" else echo "success" fi This script tries to execute curl with the standard output redirected to a bash script that checks the return code of curl (see man bash for the description of the $?) and returns "success" if the return code is non-zero and "error" otherwise. Note that sh -s - does two things: First it tries to execute curl, but since the standard output does not get redirected, the execution fails and curl returns a 0 return code. When this happens, the if-clause detects this failure and returns "error", otherwise "success". Update: If you want to parse the output of curl and check whether it equals a certain string, you could use the following script: #!/bin/bash retVal=$(curl...) if [["$retVal" == "Hello World!"]] ; then echo "Hello World!" else echo "not World" fi In this case, curl fails because it returns a non-zero value of exactly 1. However, as $retVal will be set to the return value, you can check it against the expected string "Hello World!" or "not World" (comparison case insensitive). Be aware that "$retVal" will evaluate to the return value of curl, so this form is only useful if curl returns a single value, but not two or more. 1.
