Sound Card ADI1620 Driver Mac Windows Audev 07 - ASIO Driver For AMac, Windows, MacOS.Q: A method for changing the assignment of variable values using polyglot I'm wondering if there's a method for doing something like this: a = t(x) # x is a reference to another variable, like a string or something b = 5 # this is what we want to copy a = "new string" # a is now "new string", b is still 5 ...that is, can we directly make a refer to a variable, and so change its value without assigning a new variable with new value. I'm creating a language that's based on polyglot's syntax, and I'm wondering if this is a good practice. A: What you are referring to is a reference. Each variable has a value, which is known as its reference. A reference can also be thought of as simply an address to an object. When you declare a variable, you just declare the reference (address) to an object. When you assign a value to the variable, you are copying the value of that reference to the new object, replacing the old value. You can even swap references with each other. So, if x was a reference to the object a, then you could do something like this a = t(x) # copies the value of x into a. x = a # this assigns the value of a to x, which was declared in the previous statement. This is how
