Moa is a 1E Native American warrior, who was orphaned after her tribe was destroyed, only a year before Quetzalcoatl (the Black One), the "Great Serpent" would have taken her. Her people, the Cheyenne, were murdered by the 13 tribes of North America, living in peace at that time. At the age of 19, Moa is the last remaining descendant of the ancient Cheyenne tribe. BUT, if you were to call Moa "Average Teenager" though, you would be doing her a disservice because... Moa, is the Ultimate Warrior! In fact, she never misses a chance to have a fight! But, this doesn't mean she hasn't learned to control her incredible powers and her tribe's original ways. I guess it would be more "expected" to have skills like that in an ordinary teenage girl, but not in Moa, she is not your ordinary teenage girl! To fight off an army like that without having to worry about anything, she would need to have that kind of power. Moa can summon the "Wind" that is part of the wind spirits that inhabit the

What's new in Moa: The Cheyenne Promise:

Moa: The Cheyenne Promise is a 2005 American television film. It was created for the Cheyenne Nation, an American ethnic group of indigenous Native Americans, using materials from the five-year project documentary Moá: The Cheyenne Promise. It aired on MSNBC on May 18, 2005, as a one-hour primetime presentation. It concluded the feature, "Guardian of the Green." The five-year Moá: The Cheyenne Promise project had been created to try to dramatize Native American culture. It attempted to achieve the fourth premise of Hans Christian Andersen's fable "The Ugly Duckling": for people (and people to see) "that they are like (some), if we don't remind (and show) them of (ourselves, there will be) no place in (the world) for them (to be)." Moa: The Cheyenne Promise was written by Gary O. Moore, directed by Allan King and produced by Michael Duke. Moore is a member of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. Synopsis Bucket Thunder talks to Moaneh Tintinnaboak, (Moah Tintinnabella, "Sounds of the Plains,") a Shoshone Native American woman. He explains to her the problem of starvation of Native Americans in the United States. However, at the time of his initial contact with her people, the only food available to them had been shot or poisoned, having been taken from their land. With the help of her people, he developed a process to refry seeds, growing them again. This work was the trigger of the story, for since they were taken as food or currency, they were gradually lost to the people. Moaneh struggles with what is occurring in the State of Oklahoma, where she lives. Her people, the Shoshone, had been placed in internment camps, at forced labor, where they are not allowed to speak their language or practice their culture. They are not allowed to leave the camps, and are under escort day and night, being chased by airplanes and bear dogs, while they have limited access to water.

Moaneh's people are stripped of their land, and therefore, she is left to struggle to stay alive. Moa (Tintinnabella) had been taken captive by white settlers who had kidnapped her from her home and made her a slave girl, but she escaped. She realized the only food available
