New Half-Time Show: The Pre Show After ten years of being on the air we are excited to bring the half-time show to you again. The comedy podcast Half-Time Show was conceived and created by The Cameron & Tyler Show co-creator and comedian, Scott Adsit. In the half-time show we'll ask some of the funniest and most influential comedians of our generation to give their favorite observations on what's going on in the sports world today. We're getting tighter and tighter as we make more and more Half-Time Shows every week. We already did a small press show with the hosts of Post and Decibel. In December we'll be doing a Christmas show with the same hosts.

Q: Javascript, CSS3, and HTTPS I'm very confused about how JavaScript/CSS3 browser technology can be used to access secured web sites. If JavaScript/CSS3 does not run on secured sites due to cross-browser compatibility issues and data security problems, then why is it that I see developers including JavaScript/CSS3 on sites that are supposed to be secured (HTTPS)? What is the use of using JavaScript/CSS3 to access secured sites if it cannot be safely done without getting into the cross-browser compatibility and data security pitfalls? A: CSS/JS does not actually need to "run" on a site to be used. It all depends on what you are actually doing with it and where in the process you are allowing it to run. On a protected HTTPS site, the content can load a CSS/JS file, either directly in the content, or via a manifest/hashbang URL. This content can then be used to style/do JavaScript. The browser will download/execute/process both the secure content and the content it loads from a URL. This is all done in memory. It does not download the CSS/JS to the local machine for processing. You are correct that the issues of compatibility and data security can be an issue. This is why HTTPS exists. A: Simple answer: Security via HTTP is not full-proof. This is where modern security comes from: A comment was made below that the content is visible, so it must be tampered with, and thus is a security issue. This is true, but the tamper would be visible to the end user in the same way that a non-authenticated session is visible. Furthermore, one can imagine that an SSL cert could be compromised and the hacker would appear as an SSL cert. The issue is that we cannot rely on the encryption/security of the SSL connection, it is only a means of protection from being sniffed over the wire. A: 6d1f23a050
