The calculator is programmed to count the arithmetic operations performed and not the operations per second. The results are encouraging to calculator designers as they show an average decrease of about 1.2% in performance over the 7-year period. To improve the percentage calculation at this speed, one could improve the speed of the second calculation in order to reduce the rounding errors. This is one of the major problems in this type of analysis, particularly since rounding errors can accumulate over a large number

To examine the feasibility of a computed tomography (CT)-determined lung volume (VLC), ventilation (VE), and oxygenation (Vo<sub>2</sub>/VO<sub>2</sub>) algorithm in children undergoing lung resection and to examine the evolution of VE, Vo<sub>2</sub>/VO<sub>2</sub>, and PaCO<sub>2</sub> during the surgery. A prospective study of 33 consecutive children undergoing thoracic surgery with segmentectomy and/or lobectomy, who were subjected to CT scanning and cardiopulmonary monitoring. The mean age of the children was 11.3 years. The coefficient of variation in VLC was 6.1%, the standard deviation in VE was 24.8 L/min, and the standard deviation in Vo<sub>2</sub> was 23.5 ml O<sub>2</sub>/kg/min. During the time of chest tube drainage, the correlation coefficient between CT-determined lung volume and actual lung volume measured by water-filled balloon was 0.83 (P There f988f36e3a
