The spectrum of the L1 trans-acting human retrovirus-induced leukaemias is broad, including acute nonlymphocytic leukaemias (ANLL) with MYC rearrangements, acute lymphocytic leukaemias (ALL) in infants and adolescents, B-cell chronic lymphocytic leukaemias, and lymphomas. The spectrum of the L2 retrovirus-induced leukaemias, although uncommon, is even more broad, including leukaemias, Burkittlike lymphomas and acute lymphoblastic leukaemias. In cell lines transformed by L2, a molecular hallmark of the transformed phenotype is the chronic activation of the NF-:B transcription factor, which is tightly linked to cellular transformation. In the current proposal, in-depth characterization of transcriptional regulation by the NF-:B factors in retrovirustransformed cells will be investigated. We recently found that the L1 and L2 transforming viruses give rise to unique, structurally divergent, transcription factor I: (TFI) complexes, whose activities are essential for viral replication. The TFI complex from L2 is composed of the DNA-binding subunit, NF-:B 1, and the SPI (suppressor of positive immunoglobulin gene transcription) inhibitor, which negatively regulates all TFI function. Here, we present evidence that L1 and L2 also give rise to unique and structurally divergent TFI complexes which are essential for their replication. The PI has been working with the NF-04aeff104c
