A plethora of jobs, the abundance of tools, low starting salaries, and more posts than ever on job boards and in-demand libraries mean that the web development field is a crowded place. It's time to calm down. In this talk, you'll learn why the web dev field is so saturated, what the driving factors are behind the industry, and what trends are likely to continue.

KeyMacro has been originally developed by Aleksandr Bezrukov (aleksandr@keymacro.com) in the late 90's for a variety of needs. Originally the app was meant to be a variant of the old game "Forgotten Realm" (forgot realm came to be as well) where different keystrokes could be assigned to different actions and symbols.

Overview Nowadays the app is not an utility app anymore but serves as a quick way to write comments on various webpages of the internet. It is quite simple and efficient and works like a charm. There are over 20 keywords in the language and the interface is quite intuitive and welcoming.

Features Keymacro has been designed in such a way that it is a must for webpages that are meant to be commented. It also helps organize articles to make them more accessible for future researches.

Installation To install Keymacro, you should go to the Mac App store and install a different Keymacro for Mac app. You can also search and find the application in the web. Using Keymacro First of all, we should enable the "Keymacro" service in the system preferences. After that, we have to add Keymacro to our Safari extensions. For that, you should go to the extension library and add Keymacro there. Now, everytime you want to comment on a page, simply click the "Keymacro" icon in the address bar. Keymacro is the only one app for webpages that allows us to do the following:

- Perform the tasks like moving a position in the page, adding tags, etc.
- Edit the full URL (with which you can comment on other pages too)
- Add custom comments
- Add multiple comments
- Make the page accessible to people with a specific browser, like only for IE or for Opera
- Make the page accessible to people who have a specific country, like only for Canada

Now, we can go to the page, make the comments, and then get the comments back and paste it into our notepad or another text editor. Keymacro has the ability to perform some tasks like making a screenshot of the page, add a notes, and add a keyword to each comment. These tasks may not be the main purpose of the app but it is a good feature. It has a lot of settings and

"I'll pay you back," she said, softly stroking his arm. When the petite woman beside him stood, she left a pair of chocolate-covered strawberries on the table next to his laptop. He shook his head and rubbed his chest. "Funny," he said. "You make me feel like I should at least have a beer." She winked at him and walked away with the last of her customers. Adrienne's grin widened as she finally allowed herself to enjoy her first day as a free woman. Three years ago, she'd been married to Robert Devereaux. He'd cheated on her just about every chance he got, and then when she'd caught him, she had screamed. A lot. She'd decided that she'd go to Reno and live there permanently. She'd grown tired of hearing about his expensive women, the drugs he used to fuel his infamous but brief high, and the things he'd done to her sister. She'd watched in horror as her sister's husband had been convicted of drugging and raping multiple women. She'd read the autopsy report and looked at the list of women he'd claimed to have loved, in order to escape jail time. One in particular stood out. She hadn't even recognized her name, but it was on his list. A friend had told her about the woman. The woman had nearly died. She'd spoken about the horrors of what Robert had done to her. Adrienne had agreed to testify against him. She'd saved so many women from him, had helped so many find justice. She'd been eager to get away from the life, and she'd finally done it.
